

Acceleration is the rate at which velocity changes.

Many objects continuously change direction without changing speed.
The simplest example of this type of motion is circular motion, or

